

Airhead!

The diary of an incompetent air-con apprentice...

MONDAY

Big drama at the weekend! My folks were woken up during the night by noises outside - two thieves stealing the copper pipe from the air-con system! I heard them too, and saw a scruffy white van driving quickly away... "Bloody typical!" Max exclaimed when I told him about it today, "Can't trust no-one nowadays..."

TUESDAY

Came back from lunch to see Max handing a wad of cash to two dodgy-looking blokes... in a scruffy white van. When I got inside he was stashing away some lengths of copper pipe! He just grinned and said: "Good news! Tell yer folks I've found some 'surplus-stock' for them... I can offer it at a nice discount and we'll install it cheap."

OMG! What should I do? Keep quiet and let my folks unknowingly buy back their own property? Or expose Max as a dealer of stolen goods, but lose my job? What a dilemma!

WEDNESDAY

"What did yer parents say about that copper pipe?"; Max prompted this morning. "I don't want it lying around in the shop for ages..." (I bet he doesn't)

"And remember - you're still on commission for whatever you sell!", he added.

"Oh - really?" Well, why didn't he say so before? Dilemma solved!

THURSDAY

The thieves tried selling some more 'surplus stock' to Penguin today - who immediately informed the police and had them arrested. Within 30 minutes the GNR were outside our office at Al-Cool and soon found the stolen pipe.

Max denied all knowledge of wrong-doing. Amazingly, the GNR believed him. They didn't even take the pipe away. In fact Max seemed quite friendly with them... Was that a €200 euro note I saw passed over when they shook hands...?

FRIDAY

Today we re-fitted the stolen pipes at my folks' place. Max was very quiet.

"How come the GNR didn't take any action against you?" I asked, as he was bending a piece of pipe to fit around a corner. "Just like this 'ere pipe", he said with a wink.

"Er... what d'you mean?"
"Bent copper!"

Don't get an airhead, get an expert!
