Airhead!

The diary of an incompetent air-con apprentice...

MONDAY

I'm in deep doo-doo with Max since last week's exploding solar system... But he never said it needed safety valves, so how's that my fault? Now Al-Cool's had to pay a shed-load of compensation to the client, who then went to Penguin for a better system. Today Max had a right go at me: "If we lose another job to Penguin through your fault, you're out on your arse!" Charming.

WEDNESDAY

Did an air-con service at an arty villa in the hills. There were dodgy-looking statues of Greek wrestlers all over the place. The owner, a fat Scandinavian in a kaftan, seemed to glide everywhere he went, and kept hovering around me, asking about my tools: "And what's that one?" "It's my probe"

"Hmm... it's a very long probe..."; he replied. "Do you use it a lot?" "Well, not really... it doesn't arise very often." "What a pity! An active lad like you should take every opportunity...!"

Everything he said sounded suggestive, so I panicked and changed the subject: "What's that?" I asked, pointing above the door.

"A movement detector for the alarm, dear boy - some of my curio art pieces are rather valuable... Which reminds me: I'd be interested in air-con with movement detection - can you do that?" "I don't think so... We mostly work with middle-of-the-range systems." "How dreadfully bourgeois... Well, in that case, would you mind doing something... rather naughty for me?" "Er, I'm s-sorry - ?" I stammered.

"And recommend another company?" "Oh, I see... phew, ha! Well, I shouldn't say, but I hear Penguin offer a quality system that has a movement detection function. You could try them." "Thank you, dear boy, most gracious of you... And now - how would you like to join me for an invigorating sauna?" I made my escape before his kaftan hit the floor.

FRIDAY

Today Max said: "I heard Penguin just took an order from that Scandinavian bloke you saw on Tuesday... Know anythin' about that?" "No, Max - he didn't show any interest at all" Gulp!
